PROLOGUE.

WHILE our assistants, the artist and printer, are putting the finishing touches to their work, we, a quintette of inexperienced musicians, are compelled to come forward and deliver the overture, in order that our audience may be prepared for the revelations of college life that will soon be presented.

'83 is an original class, and, as her representatives, we have departed from the well worn paths of our predecessors and struck out into a somewhat new region, hoping that the freshness of the new scenes will compensate for the loss of the old and battered landmarks. Our endeavor has been to present a sharp, fresh and interesting BUGLE, which, while pleasing to all, will wound the feelings of none. So, although

"Satire's our weapon, yet we're too discreet
To run amuck, and tilt at all we meet."

And we have restrained the exuberance of our wit whenever it could be exerted only at the expense of others feelings. Adverse criticisms we should expect ; approbation, when it is due, we should hope for. The work is done and cannot be undone. Take it for better or for worse and become learned from reading thereof.

THE YEAR.

As we look back upon the year that has passed, mingled feelings of joy and sorrow are stirred within us at the changes thus brought to our notice ; and even the most careless cannot but be reminded of the shortness and uncertainty of this life, as he sees the weeks and months and years glide swiftly and noiselessly by.

The College, as well as the Medical School, cannot but feel deeply the loss of Dr. WILLIAM WARREN GREEN, for although the students were not immediately under his instruction, yet they all admired his talents, and often availed themselves of the opportunity of attending his lectures. In no place will his death be more deeply regretted and his memory more sincerely respected, than in the halls of Bowdoin.

Prof. LADD, after a two years' sojourn with us, has entered new and wider fields of labor at Yale. We are getting used to having our best professors taken from us by richer colleges, and suppose it will continue with its accustomed regularity until some noble alumnus shall so richly endow old Bowdoin that her popular instructors cannot be torn from her. Prof. LADD, like many whom we have lost in the years gone by, carried with him the esteem of all, and will ever be pleasantly remembered by those who had the good fortune to be under his instruction.

Mr. COLE, also, has left us, and Greylock Academy of South Williamstown, Mass., now claims him as Principal. We congratulate those, who, under his guidance, will follow Hannibal over the Alps, and scoff with Juvenal at the follies of the Romans.

'81 made her debut upon the stage of active life in a manner worthy of the stuff of which she was composed. We miss her enterprise and good fellowship, and not even the numbers and surpassing excellence of the Freshmen can keep us from regretting that the relentless stream of Time has borne her, never to return, beyond these college walls. The frequent rehearsals of our musical organizations also make us mourn '81, as the present Senior class has too many members in the band to do very good work at purloining the instruments.

But '83 has received a wound that even years cannot heal, for the "Elder," becoming convinced that "it is not good for man to live alone," has taken unto him a "better half," from among the maidens of the village, and hied him away to the boundless West. And now the peaceful inhabitants of Ann Arbor will murmur their choicest oaths as they hear the notes of his shrieking fiddle borne on the midnight air, and the Michigan judge will listen in astonishment to the "words, sweeter than honey," flowing from the lips of the Attorney-at-Law, as he defends some hapless student indicted for hazing.

As old faces go out, new ones appear, and we have several new instructors to welcome this year. Prof. CAMPBELL comes to us from Minnesota, laden with the experience of many years of teaching, and gives promise of well compensating us for the loss of his predecessor. His instruction in German, during Prof. Johnson's absence, has been exceeding beneficial as well as agreeable, and we are undecided whether to esteem him most as gentleman, a teacher, or a singer.

Prof. WHEELER, who now occupies the Latin chair, has won the hearts of the Sophomores as much by his expressive use of the English, as by his knowledge of the Latin language. We are glad to welcome this infusion of Harvard blood into our Faculty, and hope that indeed "a little leaven will leaven the whole loaf."

But we must now turn our attention from the consideration of brains, and look at what muscle is doing. And just here we would call attention to the fact that at our college, in the majority of cases, brain and muscle go hand in hand, and our athletics rank high in their classes. So that we feel sure that at no distant day, the big brain will be supported by a well developed body, and not coupled with the stunted and illy-proportioned physique now occasionally met with in our colleges. The beginning of energetic work on Memorial Hall deprived us of a gymnasium, and many were the lamentations by the fat and lazy as they toiled over the sandy road on their evening stroll to Mere Brook. We greatly need some better gymnasium than the open country affords, and are expectantly awaiting the action of the Board in regard to the matter. Still, notwithstanding our lack of facilities for developing muscle, athletics have been in a flourishing condition the past year, and we may well be proud of the records made in the various contests.

BOATING received an appreciable boom as soon as an inter-collegiate race was suggested, and subscriptions were immediately solicited for the purchase of a shell in order that our crew might be able to meet the bone and muscle of other colleges in a trial of strength and skill. We were much disappointed, of course, that no race could be arranged, for we had a crew that would warrant considerable backing, inasmuch as the time made in practice gave us grounds for the belief that Bowdoin would make a record of which her sons might be proud. Should an opportunity present itself in the future without doubt, our college will be represented, for sufficient interest has been manifested among students and alumni to carry such a project to a successful end. The outlook, as regards local boating, at present seems to promise a close and exciting race next spring, and the crew that wants to win the cup will have to work hard and steadily to accomplish their object. With a neat, commodious boat-house, a balance in the treasury, and plenty of enthusiasm, our BOATING ASSOCIATION may be fairly considered to be well established on a firm basis.

BASE BALL, the "national game," (barring poker) has received more than usual support from the college the past year. The idea that new laurels should be sought beyond the limits of the State gradually seizing the men, the necessary funds were raised, and the nine started for Massachusetts in high spirits. But a long journey is not the best preparation for a trial with expert players on their own ground, and so the Harvards won an easy victory over our weary and nervous men. The same result occurred in the game with Brown, but we were more than a match for Williams. These three games gave the nine all the glory they could well bring home, and so they returned to a warm reception and a hot banquet at the depot. Within the State, we had better success, and but for some carelessness at one of the games, would have been uniformly victorious. '81 took away seven men from the nine, but we have good material left, and money and practice will enable a fresh nine to enter the arena next spring ready to contest the championship with all opposers.

FOOT-BALL seems to be reviving under the inspiration of the Sopho-Freshman game, and several teams have been kicking at each other's shins with the heartiest good will, firmly believing that it is better to give than to receive. The Sophomores were fully conscious of this principle in their game with '85, and if none but Freshmen opposed them, they would be victorious every time.

With the disappearance of the gymnasium, the DRILL has received an impetus unknown since it was made optional. Last spring we had three companies, and had battalion drill and rifle practice in addition to the regular company drill. Near the close of the term there was a rifle match and a prize drill. This fall, one company of seventy-five uniformed men has been formed, and, although the drill will never in all probability become as prominent as before the mutiny, still the men are interested, and will do good, earnest work as soon as the weather permits.

MUSIC, that delightful gift of the Gods, after keeping in the background for a couple of years, has revived, this term, with a vigor that is truly alarming, especially to those rooming in the vicinity of the band room. The boys are fond of music, and appreciate the unswerving devotion of the members of the band, and there is little doubt that they would cheerfully bear the expense of a suitable building, provided the band would hold its rehearsals about two miles down the Harpswell road. A Freshman orchestra is one of the results of the musical boom, and though apparently healthy, has many wishes for its early decease. The object of this organization seems to be the development of wind in anticipation of the needs of Sophomore year, and the furnishing of music for the benefit of upper class men at the close of the dancing lessons, Tuesday evenings.

The introduction of singing into our Chapel exercises is an improvement that is enjoyed and appreciated by all. A choir has been selected from the best singers in college, and books have been purchased with the proceeds of a concert given in the Chapel last spring. No matter how cold the Chapel may be, a man's heart involuntarily warms as he listens to the inspiring notes of Coronation; and for a time, at least, he forgets to complain because the attendance is compulsory, and the furnaces merely ornamental appendages, not intended for heating.

Our college, we have every reason to believe, is prosperous. The bequests and gifts endowed her are becoming larger and more numerous. Her members, taking it all in all, are on the increase. Our Faculty is, from time to time, being strengthened, and the most modern and approved methods of instructions are followed out. The course of study is gradually being revised and moulded to meet the wants of the student of to-day. In fact, we hold that our alumni and friends have cause for congratulation that the glimmer of a prosperous dawn is upon us, with indications that the coming day will shower its bounty upon the grand old institution.

But we have talked long enough in this rambling way of that which occupies our spare moments at college. To be appreciated, they must be participated in, and as comparatively few are able to do this, we now present some of the scenes of college life as graphically as we can, that all may see that the somber cloud of hard study has a silver lining of fun and good fellowship that is too bright to be altogether concealed.

But hark ! the bell rings, the curtain rises and the play begins.

HISTORY OF '82.

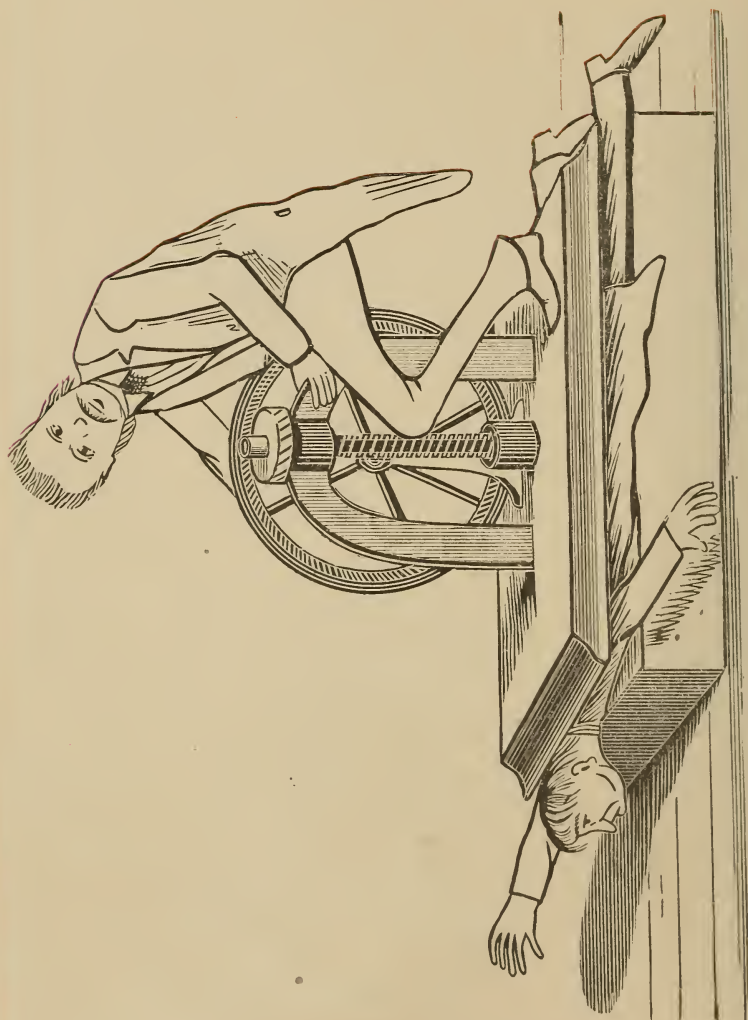

WE, the class of '82, take this last opportunity to place the record which our class has made before the readers of the BUGLE. Ours has been an eventful, if not a particularly successful career. We entered forty men, but the Faculty have, from time to time, taken away those whose influence upon the rest of the College they deemed pernicious, until now we comprise barely half our original number. As Freshmen, we did as members of that interesting class usually do, showing some cheek (when the Sophomores were not near,) and being taken in the requisite number of times. As Sophomores, considering the prowess of the class under our charge, we think that we bore ourselves quite well. On some occasions we checked the naturally aggressive spirit of '83, and on other occasions we showed the honesty of our intentions by attempting to do so.

But we boast more of our record as upper class-men. We took Physics and Psychology without a murmur, thus presenting a striking contrast to the action of previous classes.

In the college sports we have done the best that we could. Unfortunately we have always scored defeats in our class contests, and have not had a man upon the college nine since Freshman year. But for all this we make up in boating. Our crew has won two class races and proposes to win one more before we graduate. Our members are not, as a rule, high rankers and owe their college honors to the meagreness of our numbers rather than to ability. We have, as far as we were able, kept up the college customs, although we acknowledge that in that respect also we have not accomplished the greatest results.

It has been our endeavor to cultivate a feeling of harmony and fellowship between the members of our class and the rest of the college, and have succeeded, we think, sufficiently to insure us quite a cordial greeting when we shall, in the dim future, revisit our Alma Mater. This, then, is the history of '82. It is short from obvious reasons, and is modestly told because the novelty of that way of doing things will perhaps be pleasing to our class.

HISTORY OF '83.

IT is vain to wait for an inspiration suitable for this occasion. And it is with a feeling of acknowledged incompetency that we endeavor to pen, in a fitting tone, a record of '83. Hers has been indeed a brilliant career. For she has displayed her talents in every wholesome direction conceivable, and to such an advantage that it is not at all out of place that some should incessantly shower words of praise upon her. From the day that '83 first took upon herself the duties of college life, she has acted as one man

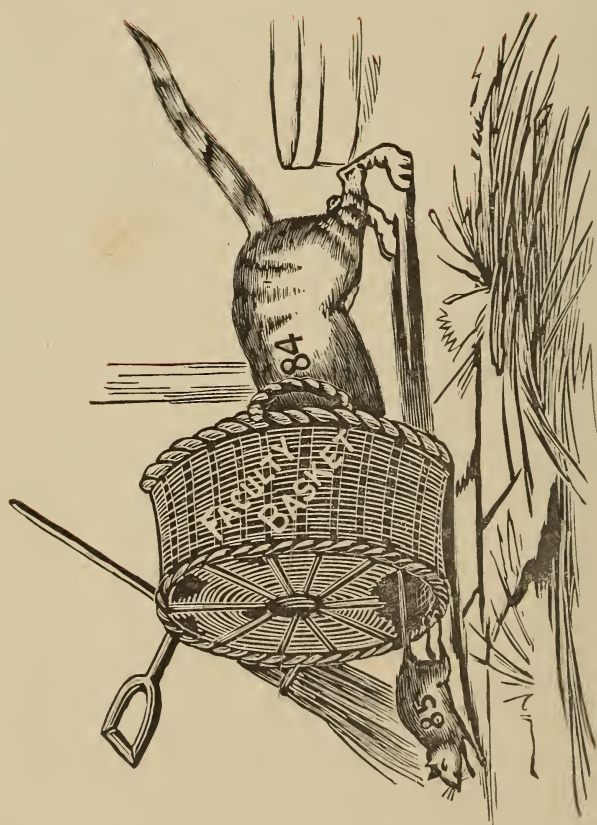

From the time her members first met, she has presented in victory or defeat, for good or bad, one solid phalanx of united brethren. While other classes by necessity, through dissension or unfortunate circumstances, have broken, scattered, and at the end presented but a sorry remnant of their former selves, '83 with members on the increase, her organization more perfect and her unity more clearly apparent, still, with well-deserved pride, points out her history and in vain waits for a better to be placed beside it.

In what has she not shown herself pre-eminent? Victorious at everything, save one contest, with the class above her. Victorious at everything with the class below her. Acting as she thought Freshmen should act and not as others counseled. Worsting the Sophomores at every point in the "custom" contests and placing that class in ridicule, she, in turn, held perfect sway over the Freshmen under her charge, and conducted them as her caprices moved her.

Where is the class that can put itself in comparison with '83 in respect to intellectual ability? What class can boast of so long a line of proficients in literature, science and arts, as that gracing the roll of '83. What class has developed such prodigies for some branches as are known to honor the present Junior class? In fact, difficult would it be to find forty men as a class possessing all the good qualities with which our subject is endowed. For all this, she is very modest. She does not parade her great capabilities, neither does she deride those who are morally or intellectually below her. But gladly giveth she aid and information to all who ask.

'83's course is not yet through, and not till then can one with any perfection chronicle her achievements, and when that is carried out to fittingly do her justice, will call for the talents of him who is the historian of historians.

HISTORY OF '84.

IT falls to our lot to write a history of the class of '84. And we believe we can fulfill this duty without prejudice and unfairness, inasmuch as our class has earned a name so pure and a record so unspotted, that unbiased and sober thinking men can have but one opinion and estimate of her. As Freshmen, our members might have been considered perfect models, standing as we did under something of a subjection. Although at first we manifested a tendency to exhibit some boldness and premature importance, after being told that it was in every way manly to show respect to those who, according to custom, were our superiors, we accepted these teachings with proper humility, and, having nipped in the bud the tendency for insubordination, abided our time.

During our Freshman year we were unfortunate in losing many of our members from circumstances not to be overcome. Nevertheless, that we had good material and loyal spirit in the class was shown by our keeping up all the college customs in spite of the diminution in number. In the sports we were well represented last year, and our prospects in this direction for the next season are certainly bright. Our boat crew last year made a showing very creditable to themselves, although we confess that the grounds for the self-assurance displayed by some of them previous to the race were certainly unstable.

After passing our final Freshman examinations, we showed a spirit which was certainly eminently suitable to Sophomores in a larval state. Our Freshman Supper was in every respect a success; and, on that occasion, the literary ability of our members displayed itself in such an unmistakable manner that acquiescence in the prognostication that success and honor could but be showered upon us was inevitable.

Owing to the fact that our numbers have not increased as they should, but rather have had an opposite tendency, our achievements during the past few months have not been what otherwise might have been credited to us. As a matter of course we gave the Freshmen what they call a victory with rope pull; but how much greater was the glory in winning the foot ball contest, when, although meeting a host of twice our number, by hard and plucky fighting we forced the enemy back, and, in time, completely routed them.

Notwithstanding Chance and Luck are two lieutenants who have never attended us, by our individual efforts, with that unity, energy, and indomitable will which has always distinguished us, we have gained the fair record so familiar to you all. And, basing our estimate upon this, we can but allot to our class a future far brighter, far nobler, far more illustrious than pen can well describe.

HISTORY OF '85.

THE theme, though new, is worthy to be treated of by the mightiest pen. A class defying comparison in whatever particular comparison is possible. Though youthful, as yet, in a complete knowledge of the ideas of college life, all have attained a proficiency for grasping those ideas which is something marvelous. Boasting of one of the largest classes that have entered Bowdoin for some years past, with a make-up embracing all the pre-eminent qualifications, we have, beyond the shadow of a doubt, entered upon a course which, gradually, year by year, partaking of more glowing colors, will finally, at our admittance into the life of the world, have assumed a dress glorious beyond description.

It is not awkwardly or with ungainly air that we have taken upon us the robes of collegians. Our broad comprehension and ready aptness for meeting with the most varied circumstances and situations were but slightly tested in our endeavors to act as was becoming college Freshmen. We displayed no insolence or indifference in order to provoke that crowd which goes under the name of a class of Sophomores, for we were well aware that constituted of such material as they were, they could but imperfectly carry out the time honored customs, and rather than see such customs perpetuated in a deteriorated manner, we determined they should not be gone through with, at least through our instigation.

We have gained thus far all that could have been expected from a class without organization and concentrated energy; and only from now onward do we believe a fair estimate of our prowess can be calculated.

Taking into consideration all our worthy characteristics, that a brilliant course is before us with rich honors and commendations must be admitted by all who carefully weigh and value our points of merit. Such being the case, it is our endeavor so to mould our actions that the expectations of others will be fully realized in the grand results that will be attained through our instrumentality.

PENCINIAN AND ATHENAEAN SOCIETIES.

These two societies, now things of the past, were, for a long time, the only ones in existence at Bowdoin, and on account of their importance, deserve more than a passing notice. Founded in the commencement of the present century, they were nearly coeval with the college itself, and grew and flourished for a long time with it. But after the introduction of Greek-letter Societies, their power, and the interest taken in them, gradually became less, until they were finally dissolved.

During the whole period of the existence of these two societies, great exertions were made by the members to further the society interests, and the object for which they were established was ever kept in view. In addition to the weekly meetings, joint discussions were held from time to time, to which all the members of the college were allowed admittance. That these discussions were in every way entertaining and profitable, we may imagine from the great interest manifested in them by the members.

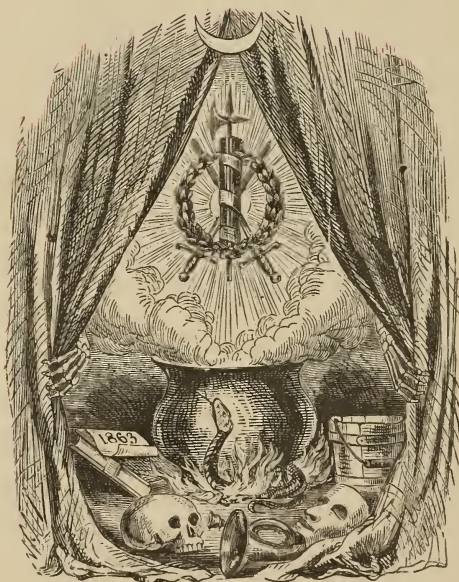

At first, anniversary celebrations were held by each society separately, but afterwards these exercises were conducted in common. On these occasions, the literary parts were always admirably sustained, and many graduate members, together with distinguished personages from other states and colleges, were present. It is to the oratorical and forensic drill received in the weekly meetings of these associations, that many of our alumni, celebrated in courts of justice and in the halls of legislation, owe their success.

We do not fully realize the value of the influence and teachings of these two organizations upon the students who enjoyed the privilege of being members thereof. It must be acknowledged, however, that the instruction which they imparted was of such a nature that the most beneficial results were realized from it. And this sketch is but a token of the general appreciation of the good works and motives of the two associations. The Pencinian was established in 1805, and held its organization until 1877, when, owing to the number and popularity of the Greek-letter Fraternities, it was dissolved, and its library turned over to the college. The Athenaeon was established in 1808, and after a varied existence met a similar fate in 1878.

GYMNASIUM.

ORDER OF EXERCISES.

Assembling of Proficients.

1st Movement.—Two mile go-as-you-please to Mare brook, with roll call on its bank.

2d.—Rest.

Great indignation meeting at the imposition of the Faculty.

3d Movement.—Wood slinging back of So. Appleton by wood be proficients.

NOTE.—This grand exhibition is said to have been very entertaining to U. S. Troops in embryo.

4th.—Rest.

5th.—Grand walk round (the temple).

Great exhaustion.

6th.—Rest.

Exercise days, three times in a term.

Proficients in the 2d, 4th, and 6th movements, seven-eighths of the members. Under this new system of systematic instruction, the most sanguine results have been realized. The whole college has relapsed into activity.

The President reports that the money is forth-coming, and soon Bowdoin students will have a new Gym. forced upon them.

above absences. I was unable to attend Latin as I had friends in town did not feel able to be present at chapel exercises and Greek as I was suffering from a severe headache. Could not attend Mathematics as I was taken ill with the diarrhea.

DEDICATED TO THE CLASS OF '83.

On the wintry night recalled above,
A gallant Fresh did hear
A plot disclosed to jerk the Fresh
And stand each on his ear.

Have you not heard of those stories old
That came from Bowdoin's walls,
Of the glaring scenes of minstrelsy
That follow Soph'more calls ?
Have you not heard of the incidents
That mark a Freshman's life ;
How his days and nights, week in, week out,

Are fraught with fear and strife ?
Have you not heard of the noble fight
That occurred one wintry night,
When Eighty-two threw up the sponge
And bowed to other's might ?

When Eighty-two had passed a year,
'Mid these familiar haunts,
And saw the coming Freshman class
Resenting jeers and taunts,
She forthwith penned a contract fair,
With soapy words replete ;
And, with an air becoming her,
The Freshman class did meet.
This contract said : "Sirs, good Freshmen,

"If you no cheek will show,
"If you will wear no so-called plugs,
"Nor so-called dog will throw,
"We tell you, as with humbled pride
"We kneel before your feet,
"That every one of your bold men
"As gentlemen will treat."
"Rise up," then spoke out Eighty-three,
"Brace up and have some style,
"Don't kneel there whining like she-pups.
"In answer, 'we should smile,'"
So one rushed out and bought a quill,
The contract duly signed,
The Soph'mores then did meditate
On what now seemed a grind.

The weeks flew by and naught took place
To violate this pledge,
But soon some boisterous Eighty-tuos
Displayed a wish to hedge.

The Sophs did swear by Allen's best
To make two Freshmen yell ;
They'd let that cussed contract now
Take a sojourn in h—l.

The gallant Fresh straightway did hie
To warn the mentioned two,
Who said the Sophs had bitten off
Full more than they could chew.
They asked some of their brethren
To call around that eve.
That there was pluck in that good class
You'd better just believe.
The doors of twenty-four were barred,
With brace and nail made fast.
A pledge went round among them all
To stick until the last.

But hark ! a tread of heavy feet
Is heard upon the stair.
No man would flinch, nor was there time
To utter up a prayer,
For "Open up !" in angry tones,
Came ringing from without.
The cry not being answered then,
Was followed by a shout,
"Give us a rest," the Freshmen cried,
"Don't be so awful bold.
"Go wash yourselves, for, by the scent,
"Your feet are getting old."
Such taunts as these provoked the wrath

Of that ungainly crowd
That forthwith plied the battering ram
And uttered curses loud.
Rupulsed in this, an axe was brought,
The wood flew thick and fast ;
And on the door the enraged mob
Their puny strength amassed.
The faithful axe at last cut through,
The motley crowd rushed in,
Where stood the Freshmen calm and cool,
Unmoved by all the din.
"Get out of this," the order came,
"And quick about it, too."
The Freshmen spoke amongst themselves
"No, fellows, this won't do."
The scene was now most ludicrous
To see the Sophs so bold,

Stand round the room with hanging heads
Awaiting to be told
What they should do, now they were in,
For they must put it through.
To ignominiously retire
Would never, never do.
A lordly Senior 'cross the way,
With gall pushed in his snout,
But his words meeting with rebuke,
He, feeling cheap, skulked out.
"We must try force," put in a Soph.
"Out with them," came the cry.
They placed their hands upon a Fresh,
Were flung back quick, sky high.
They stood aghast at thus non-plussed,
Defeat shone in their faces.
They would withdraw by adding one
To their well known disgraces.
A cowardly Soph, with faltering voice,
Raised this ungracious yelp:
"If Eighty-two can't put you out,
"She can with borrowed help."
"A bright idea, depart post haste,

"And seek what aid you can."
His comrades cried in choking tones,
And praised him to a man.
He ran post haste and quickly struck
An upper classmen's door.
"Heigh O! wake up! give Soph'mores aid,
Proceed to 24."
With this foul cry he raised a mob
Of grim and brawny beasts.
Who hastened to the fighting ground
As if their legs were greased.
They found the class of Eighty-two Crestfallen and subdued.
They stood with faces two feet long,
And to the floor were glued.
Now Eighty-three, with all her strength,
Can't fight three other classes ;
So peacefully she then withdrew
Before that crowd of asses.
The Sophomores yelled loud and long,
As if they'd won the day,
When in reality 'twas plain
They'd given themselves away.
The Fresh had gained the victory,
A victory well won, too.
The Sophomores had failed outright
To put their project through.

Two funny incidents I'll tell
Before the story's o'er.
It seems a Prof. was in the room
Adjoining 24.
From fear, perchance, he would get punched,
If he should speak a word,
He tremblingly remained within
And never spoke or stirred.
A Freshman, too, from fear or fright,
His weakness plain did show,
By leaping from the window sill
On to the ice below.

He struck amidst a pile of trash,
Old cuffs and paper collars,
And murmured, "If I had not jumped
"I'd freely give five dollars."
